E. M. BARRETT, Editor

PUBLISHED EVERY THURSDAY

CLANTON, ALA. Dec. 19 1895

Every paper in Alabama perhaps, except the Clanton Banner, has fully endorsed the message of President Cleveland. The editorial of that paper is fully in line with the English press, and shows the side with which it sympathises. The editor of the Banner is an Englishman, and for that reason we can forgive him for not being enthusiastic over the slap in the face, given to England by the President or the United States but we cannot forgive him for his sneer at the acknowledged head of this great and glorious country. The manly message of The President in reference to the Venezuela question, awakened a patriotic chord in the breast of every American citizen, and if the Banner man did not like the blow at his own country he should have kept silent, for the reason, if no other, that his readers are not Englishmen, but free and independent Americans. The action of this editor, in trying to throw discredit upon the American people; will certainly not gain him any friends in this neck of the woods. In his scurrilous article he says:

"We have no hesitation in saying that neither the "rulers" in the United States or "the rulers" in England have the least apprehension of war. It suits the purpose of both parties to raise the cry, but it will go no further."

Does he mean to make an invidious comparison between this country and England? His quotation marks would indicate it, for according to them it would seem that we have rulers, but that England has the only ministry capable of good government. This editor should not allow his patriotism for his native country to override his judgement, for to sneer at the American people in America is not good policy.

It now seems that we will have no war with England; after considerable blustering, as is their usual wont, by the beef eaters, we are informed that Lord Salisbury is preparing a statement that will end all talk of war. That blowhard nation is as eager to arbitrate with the United States as was unwilling to do so with Venezuela It is a pity England cannot be induced to fight a real power.

Johnston and jabber should be applied to that set of men who advocate free silver Whether or not they have been trained that way by the Captain we cannot say, but the fact remains they are full of talk, and seem to have plenty of time to assure every individual they meet that Dick Clarke is committing political suicide. If natural gas can win the fight, the sound money men may as well lay down their arms.

The Montgomery News is not inclined to blow its own horn, and yet a little bragging, under the circumstances, would be pardonable. The managers are taking the telegraphic news service, and the News is now one of the best afternoon dailies in the State.

WITH OUR EXCHANGES.

If, as now seems to be within the possibilities, this country should become involved in a war with Great Britian, there may be some althogether unexpected results. The war would probably be largely naval, for it is not likely that either country would invade the other, at least at the outset, whatever might occur afterwards. It might begin primarily on Venezuelan territory, when the two great powers would be on equal footing, for neither would be invading the territory of the other.

That England would have the advantage of the United States at the beginning, is hardly to be doubted. Our coast line extends thousands of miles on the Gulf and the two great oceans, with numerous flourishing seaports and maritime towns which are practically defenseless. Probably there is not a city on any of the coasts of the United States which has forts or fortifications that would withstand the powerful guns used in modern warfare. Naturally, England's first move would be towards these cities, and the capture or destruction of some of them might be looked for. We have no [illegible] against this, or [illegible] which would be [illegible] and numerous to protect all our seaports, and it might be expected that the first material advantage would be with England.

But this state of things could not be of long duration. With our unequaled facilities for shipbuilding, and our thousands of skilled laborers, it would be but a few months till Great Britian would find herself confronted at every point with ships as powerful, guns as effective and seamen as brave and skilfull as any she herself could put into service. Not only this, but within a twelve month the ocean would swarm with privateers that would drive her commerce from the seas. In the meanwhile, it might happen that some of our war vessel would be thundering at the doors of some of her own cities and dependences. While it is true that Great Britian itself is small, and has few vulnerable points for attack from an enemy, it should not be forgotten that she has colonies and dependences all over the world, and to protect all of them would be a difficult job that, our country would find in protecting its own.

That England would invade the United States is hardly to be expected. Her two former efforts in that line were not as profitable or as creditable as might have been wished, and her rulers know full well that attack would entail more serious and disastrous consequences than the former.—Montgomery News.

ADVERTISING AS A SCIENCE PAYS.

Some people say that advertising is all a matter of luck; that you cannot tell what advertising is going to do, or whether or not it is going to pay. This may be true; but it is very strange that the man who gives intelligent thought to his advertising, and it in an intelligent, earnest, straightforward way usually has the luck on his side. He is lucky in his advertising, because he reduced it to a science. Advertising is just as certain as paying rent. Advertising is governed by the same common sense business lines that govern buying lot of tomatoes or codfish.—Grocery World.

AGAINST FREE SILVER.

Unlimited Coinage Would Make America the Dumping Ground.

At the Iowa Republican convention, held at Des Moines on July 10, the Hon. Joseph R. Lane, temporary chairman, made the following reference to the silver question:

Silver being necessary in the money of the world, we must either maintain its coinage at par by legislative limitation of the amount or change the coinage ratio of the basis of its market value. Under the policy of legislative limitation of the amount, aided by redemption when in excess of demand, we have been able to maintain at par our silver coin, although its intrinsic value is much less. This policy was satisfactory so long as the price of silver continued high, but when it became reduced, on account of overproduction and other causes, there sprung up a demand by the producers of silver for special silver legislation. This claim has now crystallized into a demand for free and unlimited coinage of gold and silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. This means to give to every man, to every nation, the right to deposit at the mints of the United States silver in unlimited quantity and to demand and receive in return, free of charge or cost, that silver coined into money at the ratio of 16 to 1, bearing the stamp of our government.

In my judgment such a policy will make America the dumping ground of silver for the world. It means we would be brought at once to a silver basis. It means the degradation of our dollar to 50 cents. It means repudiation. It will bring an avalanche of silver, but a rest for labor. The Republicans of Iowa oppose this. In the state of Iowa if we owe a debt, we expect to pay it in money worth 100 cents on the dollar, in money of equal purchasing power with any other money of the world. If any one owes us, we demand and expect payment in money of equal value. This is a vital question to all classes. The farmer, the laborer, the merchant, the manufacturer, all classes have an interest in the maintenance of good currency. The dollar they receive for their productions and labor should have the highest purchasing power and be as good as the best purchasing dollar in the world. Upon a sound currency depends to a large extent the development, the prosperity, the success and the maintenance of our people.

DEMANDS OF SILVERITES.

They Ask More For Silver Than Has Ever Been Granted to Gold.

One of the claims made by the advocates of silver is that the government should treat both metals alike. How does the government treat gold? For every 23.2 grains of pure bullion deposited in the mint the owner receives a gold dollar weighing 25.8 grains and nine-tenths fine. The government stamp adds nothing to the value of the metal. It simply certifies to that value and puts the metal in a form convenient for use. Everywhere in the world gold thus coined is worth $1. If you go to Europe, the little piece of gold is worth £1. If your house burns down, the little lump of gold that was worth $1 previous to the fire will be worth $1 at any jeweler's anywhere.

The advocates of free silver do not want silver treated this way. Oh, no! They ask for more. They ask that the owner of silver bullion be permitted to take it to the mint and have the government stamp 371¼ grains, with the necessary alloy, as a dollar of equal legal tender with the gold dollar when today the value of the bullion in the dollar is worth only 53 cents. They ask that the government stamp, its fiat, to the extent of 47 cents, shall be put on every 53 cents' worth of silver they take to the mint. Say the house burns again. The piece of silver worth $1 the night before because of the stamp only is only worth 53 cents when taken to the jeweler.

Don't you see that the silver people are asking more from the government for silver than was ever granted by any government in the world for gold? One metal stamped $1 because of its value the world over; the other stamped $1, and worth but 53 cents anywhere. If we are to have fiat money, why not have it all fiat, and not 47 cents fiat? If we are to have fiat money, let it be paper. But the silver people claim that if the government passes a free coinage of silver bill silver will immediately jump in price from now being worth 53 cents for 371¼ grains to 100 cents for the same amount. Do you believe it? Some people are almost willing to believe that the moon is made of green cheese.—Humboldt (Tenn.) Messenger.

There is no medicine so often needed in every home and so admirably adapted to the purposes for which it is intended, as Chamberlain's Pain Balm.

Hardly a week passes but some member of the family has need of it. A toothache or headache may be cured by it. A touch of rheumatism or neuralgia quieted. The severe pain of a burn or scald promptly relieved and the sore healed in much less time than when medicine has to be sent for. A sprain may be promptly treated before inflammation sets in, which insures a cure in about one-third of the time otherwise required. Cuts and bruises should receive immediate treatment before the parts become swollen, which can only be done when Pain Balm is kept at hand. A sore throat may be cured before it becomes serious. A troublesome corn may be removed by applying it twice a day for a week or two. A lame back may be cured and several days of valuable time saved or a pain in the side or chest relieved without paying a doctor bill. Procure a 50 cent bottle at once and you will never regret it. JEMISON DOTS.

It Was with general regret, to all those who were fortunate enough to know him, both in his profession and as a friend to witness the departure of Dr. E. G. Givhan, who left Jemison last week for Montevallo, there to permanently remain.

With no thought of flattery, but with the assurance of stating facts, no Doctor within the space of time has been more successful and quiet for himself that confidence, popularity and assurance of doing all that medical skill could do, than Dr. E. G. Givhan.

After having graduated under high honors at the Mobile Medical College Mobile Ala., two years ago at the age of twenty two, he opened an office in Jemison to launch forward into his profession to loose or to gain, and with the knowledge of two years of successful practice that he had gained all that he could gain in small fields it cannot be a surprise that he should establish himself in broader fields.

The young doctor is worthy of his profession in all its branches and his many friends bespeak for him a successful practice and a bright future. Although missed by men then One he cannot forget that he is at all times welcome back and not so enwrapped in practice that he cannot pay Jemison a visit now and then.

The dwelling house occupied by Mr. Webb and owned by The Alliance Co-operation Company was burned Sunday All of Mr. Webbs household goods was saved. The fire originated from the flue No Insurance.

The little girl of Mr. and Mrs Neill has been very sick but at this writing is much better.

Several of the young gentlemen and ladies, who have been off at school, are home spending the holidays.

The new dwelling of Mrs. Heath is completed and occupied Rev. by F. M. Woods. This building is quite an improvement to Jemison.

MRS. N. C. MILLER.

Of Fort Wayne, Ind., writes on Nov. 20, 1894: "I was afflicted for forty years with heart trouble and suffered untold agony. I had weak, hungry spells, and my heart would palpitate so hard, the pain would be so acute and torturing, that I became so weak and nervous I could not sleep. I was treated by several physicians without relief and gave up ever being well again. About two years ago I commenced using Dr. Miles' Remedies. One bottle of the Heart Cure stopped all heart troubles and the Restorative Nervine did the rest, and now I sleep soundly and attend to my household and social duties without any trouble.

The Free Silver Chimera.

The ridiculous attempt of the silver contingent to commit the United States to free coinage—to the exchange of 50 cents' worth of silver for a dollar in gold—rivals in its absurdity and enthusiasm the wildest chimera of romantic fiction. The late Professor Huxley, some years ago, attended a meeting of the British Association for the Advancement of Science, at Belfast, Ireland. All the servants in the town assembled regularly at a certain hall. Professor Huxley arose late one morning and feared he should be late at the meeting. Coming out of his lodgings he hailed one of the Irish vehicles known as an outside car, and mounted it.

"Now, drive fast," he said to the driver, "for I am in a great hurry."

Off went the driver at a mad pace, which almost threw the professor off his seat, and began charging along the road in a somewhat indefinite way. Presently it occurred to Huxley to say, as he held on for his life:

"My good man, do you know where I want to go?"

"No, yer Anner," answered the driver, coolly; "you didn't tell me where to go, but annaway, I'm drivin' fast!"

His Curiosity Gratified.

"What can your sex do, madam," asked the cynical caller, "in case it becomes necessary to nail a campaign lie?"

"We may not be able to nail it, sir," replied with dignity the new woman who had gone into politics, "but we can punch it full of holes with a hatpin."—Chicago Tribune.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. Bubbles or Medals.

"Best sarsaparillas." When you think of it how contradictory that term is. For there can be only one best in anything—one best sarsaparilla, as there is one highest mountain, one longest river, one deepest ocean. And that best sarsaparilla is———?.... There's the rub! You can measure mountain height and ocean depth, but how test sarsaparilla? You could, if you were chemists. But then, do you need to test it? The World's Fair Committee tested it,—and thoroughly. They went behind the label on the bottle. What did this sarsaparilla test result in? Every make of sarsaparilla shut out of the Fair, except Ayer's. So it was that Ayer's was the only sarsaparilla admitted to the World's Fair. The committee found it the best. They had no room for anything that was not the best. And as the best, Ayer's Sarsaparilla received the medal and awards due its merits. Remember the word "best" is a bubble any breath can blow; but there are pins to prick such bubbles. Those others are blowing mere "best sarsaparilla" bubbles since the World's Fair pricked the old ones. True, but Ayer's Sarsaparilla has the medal. The pin that scratches the medal proves it gold. The pin that pricks the bubble proves it wind. We point to medals, not bubbles, when we say: The best sarsaparilla is Ayer's.

The Kola Nut.

The kola nut, which found its origin in Central Africa, and which has become famous throughout the world as an invaluable addition to medical science, is to be introduced on the east coast.

The kola tree grows to a height of about forty feet, and one tree has been known to produce a crop of from 500 to 800 pounds. Each pod generally contains four seeds, fifty of which will make one quart, or one and one quarter pounds, which is sold at $1.00 per pound and upwards.

The first fruiting occurs five years from planting, but the maximum yield is not reached until the ninth or tenth year.

The tree flourishes in moist, hot lands, at or a little above sea level.

The medical properties of kola are many and of the greatest value to medical science.

The great value of kola is due to the presence of certain alkaloids, theobromine and caffeine, together with the new and powerful principle known as kolanin.

The stimulating and sustaining powers of coffee and cocoa are well known, and kola contains not only a large percentage of their characteristic alkaloids, but also kolanin, whose physiological effects are more powerful and lasting than either caffeine or theobromine, while at the same time it is free from the objections urged against cocaine. In view of these deductions, therefore, kola must be accepted as a valuable addition to our materia medica.

Because of its sustaining powers kola is used by the natives when long-continued exertion is demanded and little food obtainable; hence we are led to believe that this peculiar property is similar to that of cocoa. That it lessens tissue waste is shown by the diminished excretion of urea.

The effect of kola upon the circulating system is that of a tonic stimulant, the pulse being increased in strength and frequency.

The kola tree resembles somewhat the chestnut. Despite the fact that it prefers the moist climate of the coast, it has been found 500 miles in the interior.

As Florida possesses the only soil in the United States that is suitable for this product, there seems to be great wealth in store for the state by its introduction among the colonies on the southeast coast.—Exchange.

The Tadpole in Science.

At the close of the last century Galvani astonished the world with the experiments he performed on frogs. There is no doubt but what his work, so far as development of engineering was concerned, almost retarded the progress, at least for a very short time; but he has opened a field which to future generations may be of as much, possibly of more importance than all the practical applications of electricity today. We refer to the physiological effects of the electric currents.

Now, as we approach the end of another century, another experiment on tadpoles has been made, which in our minds' eye may have tremendous consequence. Dr. Waller has observed that tadpoles face the positive pole when an electric current is sent through the trough in which they live. This is certainly a remarkable fact, and we hope sincerely that this matter may not be taken up as a matter of ridicule, or of play, for there may be hidden in this simple experimental fact a vast deal of knowledge; not that we want to prophesy, but on the face of it it does not seem impossible that this simple fact should be the commencement of a knowledge of electro-physiology, which in a hundred years from now might in perfection be second to none of our descriptive sciences.—Max. Osterberg in Electric Power.

Bedroom Rugs of Burlaps.

A pretty little amateur artist has made for herself a pair of charming bedroom rugs. The material is burlap, lined with old carpet, to give it body. The design is taken from the motif of the wall paper and represents timothy grass, redtop and clovers, painted in shades of olives, tans, browns and old pink, the colors greatly diluted, so as to give a printed rather than a painted effect. Golden and brown butterflies are poised here and there, and a busy bumblebee almost buzzes, head down, in a great clover bloom.

The rugs are edged with a flax fringe, in the shade of the burlap. In painting grasses and leaves a mistake frequently made by amateurs is to have them all too much of a color. Shade effects should be introduced by having those at the back in faint grays and in much lighter tones of all the colors used.—New York Herald.

THE 54TH CONGRESS.

ROUTINE OF HOUSE AND SENATE BRIEFLY CHRONICLED.

Summary of Bills and Resolutions Presented and Acted Upon.

THE HOUSE.

It being generally understood that the ways and means committee would not be prepared to report its bill for the relief of the treasury situation before Wednesday or Thursday, the attendance in the house during Monday's session was comparitively small. The speaker announced that by an inadvertence in the announcement of committees on Saturday, the name of Mr. Tracey, republican, Missouri, had been omitted from the committee on naval affairs. After a little argument and objection from Mr. Crisp in behalf of the minority against the chairmen of three election committees referring the elections contests, the speaker ended the matter by making a concession and referring the contests one to each committee in regular order.

Mr. Dingley, republican, chairman of the ways and means committee, then took the floor. The committee, he said, had met daring the morning and had unanimously decided that in view of the president's special message to congress on Friday, and the circumstances surrounding it that it was not appropriate that the two houses should adjourn until a proper response had been made. In view of the urgency of the matter, de deemed it proper to say that the committee had already entered upon the preparation of a bill or bills. While he was not prepared to say now, when those bills would be ready, he was certain that they would not be presented to the house before Thursday.

It was important that the members of the house who had gone home under the impression that the usual holiday recess would be held should be present when the report of the ways and means committee was made and it was proper that they should have an opportunity to return. He would ask the house to meet Tuesday for the purpose of agreeing upon the disposition of the president's message, after which he would ask the house to adjourn over Christmas day. "On Thursday," he continued, "we hope that the house will make a response to the urgent request of the president and take some action which will relieve the situation in which the country finds itself." Then at 12:28 the house adjourned until Tuesday.

The attendance of the senators at noon Tuesday was quite as full as usual, no falling off on account of the Christmas holidays being noticeable. The senate galleries were pretty well filled. Resolutions and memorials from Ohio indorsing the action of the president in relation to Venezuela and in favor of recognizing the Cuban revolutionists as beligerants were presented by Mr. Sherman, and referred to the committee on foreign relations.

In introducing a bill for the issue of Springfield rifles to each state and territory for the national guard thereof, in exchange for the rifles now held by them, Mr. Hawley, republican, of Connecticut, explained that it had nothing whatever to do with the war scare. The bill was referred to the committee on military affairs. Mr. Allen, populist, of Nebraska, offered the following resolution:

"Whereas, Recent events have shown European nations are making an aggressive attempt to obtain a greater foothold on the American continent, and

"Whereas, Such attempt shows the necessity of a closer union of the American republics; therefore, be it Resolved, That it is the sense of the senate that the United States of America should as speedily as possible invite all American republics to enter into a closer union to be known as the pan-American union, for the purpose of promoting the general industrial and commercial welfare of the members thereof, and secure said respective republics from European or other foreign encroachments. Such union should be made of lasting benefit to the people of the several republics forming it and a unit of value should be established and maintained therein, which should be a full legal tender and circulate freely between the various republics." The resolution was referred to the committee on foreign relations.

Mr. Hill asked the senate to take up and pass the bill introduced by him several days ago to repeal the statute which prohibited ex confederate officers who had previously been commissioned officers in the United States army or navy from holding positions in the army or navy. Mr. Sherman, declared himself as heartily in favor of the bill, but thought that it should take the ordinary course and be referred to the committe on military affairs. Mr. Hill said every senator understood it, yet for divers reasons no senator wished it to pass just yet. After some discussion a vote was taken on Mr. Sherman's motion to refer the bill, and the result was: Yeas, 8; nays 30—less than a quorum. A subsequent roll call showed the presence of forty seven senators—over a quorum—and then Mr. Sherman withdrew the motion to refer and the bill was read a third time and passed.

Mr. Vest modified his silver coinage resolution of last week by making it a joint resolution and changing it in some other particulars so that it now directs the secretary of the treasury to coin as rapidly as possible the silver bullion in the treasury purchased under the act of July 14, 1890, into standard silver dollars, and with such dollars to redeem the treasury notes issued for the purchase of the bullion, when offered for redemption, "such notes to be destroyed as soon as they are redeemed." It also directs the secretary of the treasury to redeem the treasury notes, commonly called greenbacks, when presented for redemption, in standard silver dollars, or both, as the condition of the treasury may require—the greenbacks so redeemed to be reissued, as provided by the act of May 31, 1878. Mr. Morrill moved to refer the resolution to the finance committee, but before calling for a vote on that motion he moved an adjournment, and the senate at 2 p. m. adjourned until Thursday.

In anticipation of a field day in the house Thursday over the passage of the tariff bill agreed on by the ways and means committee, great crowds were attracted to the capitol and every available inch of space in the public and private galleries, save the sections reserved for the executive and diplomatic corps, were taken. Most of the members who had gone home for the holidays had hurriedly returned, and the attendance on the floor was almost as large as on the opening of the session. In addition, many senators were present. Immediately after the reading of the journal, Mr. Dingley, the chairman of the ways and means committee, reported from that committee the revenue bill, which the speaker forthwith referred to the committee of the whole house on the state of the union.

Mr. Crisp, the leader of the minority, explained that the minority had had no opportunity to prepare and file the views of the minority. Mr. Henderson, republican, from Iowa, from the committee on rules, presented the special order under which the house was to operate. It was iron-clad in its character. It provided that immediately after the adoption of the order it would be in order to call up the revenue bill just presented by Mr. Dingley, and that the debate should run until 5 o'clock, when, without intervening motion, the vote should be taken on passage of the bill. Mr. Henderson demanded the previous question on the adoption of the order, which was ordered without division. Mr. Henderson then took the floor and explained briefly the urgency which necessitated such summary action of the house on such an important measure.

Mr. Crisp called the attention of the house to the effect of the rule under which it was proposed to operate and asked every member to weigh his responsibility when he voted for it. Here was a bill, he said, that affected every interest and all sections of the country, which it was proposed to put through under a rule that deprived the members of any right to offer amendments. It must be taken or rejected as a whole. He insisted that there was no necessity for such a course. This bill was not demanded by any department of the government. There was no necessity for increased revenue. He protested against the use of the whip and spur for its passage before the opinion of the experts of the treasury department could be obtained as to its effect.

Mr. Dalzell, a member of the committee on rules, said there was no one who did not know that we face a peculiar exigency. The president and the secretary of the treasury had both become alarmed and the president had asked the house, notwithstanding it was opposed to him politically, to come to his aid. The treasury was being rapidly depleted, and since the democracy had come into the control of the executive branch of the government there had been frequent bond issues.

Mr. Turner, democrat, Georgia, called attention to the fact that both the president and the secretary of the treasury had given congress the highest assurance that there was ample revenue in the treasury. Both the president and secretary of the treasury had pointed out the evil in the financial situation and its remedy. Everybody understood the stress existing. And what was to be the response of congress? Before all remedial legislation was to be put a proposition to still further bleed and tax the American people.

Mr. Henderson closed the debate with a speech which aroused the republican side to great enthusiasm. This was, he said, a business matter for a business people, and should be met in a business way. The republicans were not afraid to resume responsibility. Democratic policies had emptied the treasury. The republicans would fill it. They would right the ship of state that had been plunging half seas under ever since the democratic party assumed the bridge. A democratic president had sent to congress a declaration of war, and four days afterwards had filed a petition in bankruptcy. (Republican applause.)

The rule committee's order was then adopted—213 to 89—a strictly party vote, save that Linney, North Carolina, and Connelly, Illinois, republicans, voted with the democrats. By a vote of 205 to 81 the house at 5:30 o'clock passed the revenue bill.

THE SENATE.

Mr. Cooper, of Florida, offered in the house Tuesday a bill making Palm Beach a sub-port of delivery and entry and asked consent for present consideration. The necessity for the passage of the bill was that Mr. Flagler, the oil and hotel magnate, intended to put on a line of American steamers between that port and the Bahamas, the first steamer of which, the Northumberland, was due to arrive at Palm Beach on January 17th. At present there were no facilities for entering and clearing the vessels nearer than Key West, which would involve a week's delay in every case. The bill was passed.

A resolution offered by Mr. Hepburn, republican, of Iowa, providing a personal clerk for the chairman of the most important committees to receive the same compensation as is paid the clerks of members, was referred to the committee on accounts. An unsuccessful attempt was made by Mr. Turner, democrat, of Georgia, to gain unanimous consent for printing in the resolution of inquiry relating to his action in the matter of the Wichita reservation. On motion of Mr. Cragley, republican, of Maine, it was agreed that when the house adjourned it should be until Thursday next. The usual resolution from the ways and means committee, distributing the president's annual message to the several committees having jurisdiction of the subjects treated, was reported.

Mr. Lacy, republican, of Iowa, called attention to the fact that the resolution referred the Nicaragua canal question to the committee on interstate and foreign commerce. Until the canal was built, he said, the subject was properly under the control of the committee on railways and canals. His motion to so change the reference was lost by a vote of 80 to 8. The resolution was then agreed to. Speaker Reed laid before the house the following telegram, although, he said, it had reached the chair in an irregular manner:

"Rio Janeiro, December 21.—President, Chamber of Representatives, Washington, D. C.: The chamber of deputies of the United States of the republic of Brazil congratulates the chamber of representatives of the North American union for President Cleveland's worthy message which so nobly and highly defends the rights and liberty of the American nations consecrated in the Monroe principles.

"ROSA E. SILVA, President."

The reading of the message was followed by applause. At 12:40 o'clock p. m., on motion of Mr. Dingley, the house adjourned until Thursday.

Iron and Food.

Professor Bunge, in the course of a paper on iron as a medicine, read before the German Congress of Internal Medicine, has been ventilating some ideas which are as much a matter of general science (and therefore extremely important) as they are details connected with the physician's domain. He is strong on the point that iron should reach our blood through the medium of our food rather than through the druggist's specialties. Iron, as everbody knows, is a food element absolutely essential for the proper constitution of the body. It is as rigidly demanded by the plant as by the animal; and it is from plants that Professor Bunge shows we should chiefly receive our iron supply. Spinach, he tells us, is richer in iron than the yolk of eggs, while the yolk contains more than beef. Then succeed apples, lentils, strawberries, white beans, peas, potatoes and wheat, these substances being given in the order in which they stand as regards the plentifulness of their iron constituents.

Cow's milk is poor in iron, but, as balancing this deficiency in the food of the young mammal, it is found that the blood of the youthful quadruped contains much more iron than the adult. Thus, in a young rabbit or guinea pig one hour old, four times as much iron was found as occurs in these animals two and a half months old.

LIVELY IN "OLD KENTUCK."

The Shotgun and Pistol Cause Five Tragedies.

Five tragedies were reported from various parts of Kentucky Monday. Near Eckton Leve Henderson and John Bailey met at a house of ill repute and quarreled. After both had emptied their pistols without effect Henderson used a shotgun with fatal effect on his antagonist.

Near Hodginsville Tom Friend, supposed to be a harmless imbecile, saw Tom Carrico riding by. Without any provocation he fired the contents of a double-barreled shotgun into Carrico, wounding him fatally.

In the upper end of Barren county a band of negro highwaymen attempted to hold up a party of white men. The negroes were pursued and one, Montford Gatewood, was killed.

A. M. Logan, a prominent farmer living near Madisonville, attacked and killed a young man named Coates. Logan is supposed to be crazy, as no cause can be ascribed for his deed.

At a negro festival in Christian county, near Hopkinsville, Jerry Pettis shot Albert Thomas in the arm. Thomas instantly put a ball through Pettis's body, causing death.

A Tobacco-Chewing Dog.

A dog addicted to chewing tobacco is owned by Joe Holden, a butcher of Eighteenth and Sigel streets. The dog is an improvement upon the average tobacco chewer, in that he does n't spit on the floor of a trolley car. He takes a bit of the weed, and, holding it between his fore paws, sucks all the substance out of it. He has been chewing tobacco for about two years. Tobacco is the first thing he gets in the morning, and if he does not get it at home he will go out among the neighbors, who know the dog's habit, and whine among them until he gets what he wants. He will not touch fine cut, his weakness being in the direction of plug tobacco. He learned to chew when a puppy, his owner being in the habit of giving him tobacco as a joke when he sat on his knee.

To Disqualify Negroes.

In the Virginia house of delegates Tuesday a resolution was offered by a prominent democratic leader submitting to the voters of the state the question of calling a constitutional convention. The object of the convention, should it be called, would be to adopt provisions disqualifying negroes by the Mississippi or other plan.

Utah's Constitution.

The constitution for the state of Utah, which was submitted to the attorney general by the president, has been examined and approved by that officer. The president will, on January 4, 1896, issue his proclammation, admitting the territory of Utah as a state of the Union, and the terms of the state officers will begin on the following Monday, January 6th.

Caused by Vaccination.

From the Journal, Detroit, Mich.

Every one in the vicinity of Meldrum avenue and Champlain street, Detroit, knows Mrs. McDonald, and many a neighbor has reason to feel grateful to her for the kind and friendly interest she has manifested in cases of illness.

She is a kind-hearted friend, a natural nurse, and an intelligent and refined lady.

To a reporter she recently talked at some length about Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, giving some very interesting instances in her own immediate knowledge of marvelous cures, and the universal beneficence of the remedy to those who had used it.

"I have reason to know," said Mrs. McDonald, "something of the worth of this medicine, for it has been demonstrated in my own immediate family. My daughter Kittie is attending high school, and has never been very strong since she began. I suppose she studies hard, and she has quite a distance to go every day. When the small-pox broke out all of the school children had to be vaccinated. I took her over to Dr. Jameson and he vaccinated her. I never saw such an arm in my life and the doctor said he never did. She was broken out on her shoulders and back and was just as sick as she could be. To add to it all neuralgia set in, and the poor child was in misery. She is naturally of a nervous temperament and she suffered most awfully. Even after she recovered the neuralgia did not leave her. Stormy days or days that were damp or preceded a storm, she could not go out at all. She was pale and thin, and had no appetite.

"I have forgotten just who told me about the Pink Pills, but I got some for her and they cured her right up. She has a nice color in her face, eats and sleeps well, goes to school every day, and is well and strong in every particular. I have never heard of anything to build up the blood to compare with Pink Pills. I shall always keep them in the house and recommend them to my neighbors."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are considered an unfailing specific in such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effects of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, that tired feeling resulting from nervous prostration; all diseases resulting from vitiated humors in the blood, such as scrofula, chronic erysipelas, etc. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities, and all forms of weakness. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of what ever nature. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price (50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50—they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

RIPANS TABULES

A reporter called, on Wednesday evening, May 8, 1895, at the residence of Mr. William McMahon, No. 1688 Pearl street, Brooklyn village (Cleveland), O., to learn, if possible, the cause of the noticeable improvement in his physical condition over that of a year ago, when he was a sufferer from indigestion and various organic disorders. "You see," began Mr. McMahon, "to start with, my work—that of setting type at the case—allows me little chance for bodily exercise, and is altogether too confining for anybody who is in the least subject to indigestion or dyspepsia. Perhaps not more so than many another mechanic or artisan who is constantly indoors and under severe mental strain, while the physical development is sadly in need of something to keep it in trim. Well, that has been my complaint for years, and some months ago I became very bilious, and constipation made life miserable for me at times. Then it took a seat in my LIVER, which became noticeably inactive, and I became alarmed about it. The first thing I turned my attention to was to secure a 'liver regulator,' which, however, failed to regulate; next I sought relief in 'liver pills,' which so pained and griped me that the cure was, I thought, worse than the disease. The next thing I did was to throw away the whole 'shooting match,' and resolve to take no more proprietory medicines. However, on hearing my tale of woe, one day, at the office, a fellow-workman offered me a small Tabule—Ripans by name—called it [illegible] the liver. I [illegible], expecting to [illegible] about fifteen minutes with the 'gripes.' But I was agreeably surprised in its action. It was very gentle, and I resolved to try a box. Since then I have gradually noted an entire change in the working of my system, and think that Ripans Tabules are the best remedy for liver and stomach troubles this side of anywhere. They are really a substitute for physical exercise. Have one before you go?" And Mr. McMahon produced his box of "stand-bys" from his inside pocket as the reporter took his leave.

Ripans Tabules are sold by druggists, or by mail if the price (60 cents a box) is sent to The Ripans Chemical Company, No. 10 Spruce st., New York. Sample vial, 10 cents.

Whip a poorly nourished horse when he is thoroughly tired. He may go faster for a few rods, but his condition is soon the worse for it. Better stop and give him food. Food gives force. If you are thin, without appetite; pale, because of thin blood; and easily exhausted; why further weaken the body by applying the whip. Better begin on a more permanent basis. Take something which will build up the tissues and supply force to the muscular, digestive, and nervous systems.

GOSSIP OF WASHINGTON IN BRIEF PARAGRAPHS.

Doings of the Chiefs and Heads of the Various Departments.

Secretary Herbert has practically concluded to award the contract for the construction of battleships No. 5 and 6 to the Newport News Dry Dock and Shipbuilding Company, of Virginia, at their bid of $2,500,000 for each ship.

The ninth annual report of the interstate commerce commissioners gives an account of the operations of that organization during the past year and makes many recommendations regarding changes in the act creating the commission, which are necessary to make its work effective.

The president gave his first state dinner of the season Thursday night, thus inaugurating the social gayeties of the winter. The dinner, in its official sense, was a dinner to the members of the cabinet, but the guests included several others well known in official and social circles.

Austro-Hungary can no longer be counted on as a market for American petroleum, according to United States Consul Murphy at Luxemburg, who furnishes to the state department a report upon the recently developed oil fields of that country. One well supplied 1,000 tons of oil in the first twenty-four hours and another is ejecting 1,000 barrels a day. Meanwhile the use of Russian petroleum is increasing in Germany, where it is sold for one cent per quart less than American oil.

At the cabinet meeting Tuesday the advisability of making an immediate bond sale of $100,000,000 was considered. The statement was made that an arrangement had been perfected to procure the amount in gold on favorable terms from the syndicate which had managed the last transaction. This syndicate not only agreed to take $100,000,000 of 4 per cent. bonds at a premium which would net the bondholders a fraction over 3 per cent., but they would bind themselves to procure another $100,000,000, most of which should come from foreign sources, should the alleged emergency demand such treatment.

John Karel, United States consul general at St. Petersburg, Russia, has made a report to the state department, which has some interest in connection with the utterly unsupported rumors about Russia having recently tendered gold to the United States. After giving the values of Russian gold currency under a recent adjustment of the Imperial bank, Mr. Karel concludes his communication with this paragraph: "I understand that the object of the minister of finance of the Russian empire is to accumulate into the imperial vaults as much gold as possible, with a view to establishing in future the Russian finances on a gold basis.

Minority List Complete.

The democratic steering committee has completed the assignment of the minority representation on the senate committees. The minority chairmanships have been assigned as follows: Conference room, Mr. Gorman; engrossed bills, Mr. Cockrell; epidemic disease, Mr. Vest; Nicaraguan canal, Mr. Morgan; private lands and claims, Mr. Harris; revolutionary claims, Mr. Pugh; Potomac river front, Mr. George; woman's suffrage, Mr. Call; additional accommodations for the library, Mr. Voorhees; five civilized tribes, Mr. Gray; transportation and sale of meat products, Mr. Blackburn; corporations in the District of Columbia, Mr. Jones, of Arkansas.

New Year's at the Capital.

New Year's day was celebrated here in the good old-fashioned way. Washington, of late years, is almost the only city that has retained the old customs. Calls were exchanged by everybody in official and private life. All of the officials received, the president first of all; the vice-president, the members of the cabinet, heads of bureaus and so on down to the humblest officials, and after that the great social public.

It was an ideal day—a clear sky and a bracing breeze from the northwest, making walking pleasant. It was rather hard upon the occupants of the gay equipages and the vast throng on foot, who were obliged to wait in the long line outside of the white house to pay their respects to the president and exchange greetings with Mrs. Cleveland and the ladies of the cabinet.

Surplus in December.

The monthly comparative statement of the receipts and expenditures of the United States shows that during the month of December the receipts, cents omitted, aggregated $26,283,937, as follows: Customs, $12,169,172, internal revenue, $12,750,771; miscellaneous, $1,363,993.

The expenditures during the month amounted to $25,814,817, leaving a surplus for the month of $474,840. The figures for the first half of the present fiscal year ended December 31, however, show a deficit of $15,394,707, as against a deficit of $27,565 during the first half of last year, as compared with December, 1894, the receipts from customs show an increase of a little less than $1,000,000, and from internal revenue an increase of about $3,350,000.

For the last six months the receipts from customs show an increase over the corresponding period last year of $12,377,000. There was during the same months a loss in the returns from internal revenue of about $5,276,000.

How to Abolish Poverty.

Circulars have been issued by Commissioner of Labor Wright, to labor leaders in the United States, asking for suggestions for topics for brief original inquiries by the department. The matters are required to be nonpartisan and to relate to the general welfare of the people. Among the responses is one from the Knights of Labor general executive board, suggesting the question of the feasibility of the government offering opportunities for employment on government works to all such citizens as can not secure work at any private employment. The letter of the Knights of Labor closes as follows:

"Before the question of abolishing inforced idleness and its attendant miseries and securing opportunities for all the men of the nation to earn an honest living, all other questions pale into insignificance.

"If you will take two of your best men and let them work on this question with energy and intelligence for two months and make an honest, fearless report on what they find, no work you have ever done since you took charge of your office will do yourself and the department of labor so much honor and credit as this, which will tend to throw light on the dark subject of inforced idleness and involuntary poverty."

Will Demand Free Silver.

The senate finance committee adjourned at 12:30 o'clock Thursday until Friday. No action was taken and no vote was had. The bond bill was discussed, but the tariff bill was not taken up. Senators White and Walcott were not present.

Senator Vest was not present so that the free silver men and anti-silver men were a tie. It is understood that the intention of the silver men is to report either a free coinage substitute or amendment to the bond bill, probably an amendment. After the regular meeting of the committee the republican members held a conference in the committee room and the democrats conferred in the district committee room. Senator Jones, populist, Nevada, went with the democrats as the conference was considered a silver conference more than anything else. The silver men unanimously decided to insist upon an amendment in the nature of an entire substitute providing for free coinage of silver and the elimination of all authority for the issuance of bonds. Senator Jones, of Arkansas, was delegated to prepare a measure in accordance with these views to be submitted to a full meeting of the committee as soon as it can be completed.

There is hope that the bill can receive final consideration at the hands of the committee in time to permit reporting to the senate Friday, but this may not be accomplished.

The absentees will be paired when a vote is reached in committee.

QUADRILATERAL DUEL

In Which Winchesters Were Used and Two Men Killed.

[illegible]rible battle and double murd[illegible]key, a hamlet near P[illegible] Virginia, Tue[illegible] Christmas over a drunken row [illegible] a woman. Bill Wells and Gas Osborn, always known as good citizens, met Jim Cox and Abe Williams, two desperate mountain outlaws, on the public road a half mile from Donkey, heavily armed with Winchesters, for the purpose of fighting it out. Firing continued for more than two hours. Shortly after the firing commenced a deputy sheriff of Wise county, whose name has not been learned, appeared on the scene, but could not stop the fighting. Soon Wells and Osborn lay lifeless on the roadside, with Cox seriously wounded, being shot twice. The deputy sheriff also received a serious wound in the left leg.

FOUR PERSONS WERE KILLED.

This Boundary Question Was Brought to a Focus.

A pitched battle occurred a few days ago between the inhabitants of the towns of Huitzi and San Juan del Estado, Mexico, as the outgrowth of the bitter feeling that has existed for some time between those places concerning their boundary lines. Four persons were killed and twenty injured, many of the latter seriously. The state troops were ordered to the scene of the rioting and made many arrests.

In view of the great benefit that must accrue to the business interests and trade relations of New York by holding the next democratic national convention in that city, The Herald takes pleasure in announcing that it will head the subscription list for that purpose with $10,000, provided the rest of the amount required be subscribed by the business men of the city.

Failure in Chicago.

The Faxon & Libby Co., wholesale manufacturers of sash, doors and blinds, at Chicago, has made an assignment. Assets and liabilities are each placed at $100,000. The cause of the failure is said to be poor trade and slow collections.

MANY ARE DEAD

WHILE THE LIST OF MISSING IS APPALLING.

Disastrous Result of an Explosion in St. Louis, Mo.

Just at 1 o'clock Thursday afternoon a series of terrific explosions laid waste the vicinity of Second and Vine streets, St. Louis, where printing houses and allied trades are numerous.

Just after the clock struck a boiler in George F. Merrit's printing office, basement of No. 308 North third street, just across the alley from the storage and commission house of H. B. Grubb, exploded.

In the rear of the Grubb establishment a large quantity of fireworks was stored and a second explosion occurred, followed immediately by a third that lifted the Grubb building and dropped it in a mass of wreckage.

The explosion caused general consternation and every window for three blocks was broken. A large plate glass window in the Merchants' exchange, four blocks away, was shattered and the traders stampeded.

Up to 6 o'clock Thursday night five bodies had been recovered, nineteen persons are missing as far as reported to the police, and the list of injured numbers fifty. In addition to the list of injured many others were hurt. Following are those known to be dead: Joseph Kovarick, Frank Niehaus, Albert Mellier, Charles Claybrook, colored; two bodies, unindentified.

The missing are: Chris Kafger, Thomas Ley, Al Mellier, Charles Frieson and nineteen others.

The badly injured are: Albert Steinmeier, probably fatally; Will Brondiweder, Chris Khraft, Horace Diokt, L. Diort, John Corcoran, Edgar Vance, Ben Taylor, Joseph Brandeweid, William Horner, Hugh Allen, Joe Corcoran, Albert Schneitz, Henry Stack, Richard Couleshaw, William Couleshaw, John Carter, Joe Barker, Charles Amos.

The total loss will exceed $100,000; all covered by insurance. The H. B. Grubb Company occupied the ground floor of 309 North Second street, and the Anchor Company the second and third floors. Adjoining the wrecked building on the south is the Levison & Blythe Printing Company, where most of the injured were employed. The north walls and two floors went down. On the north is the Excelsior Wire Company's building, also partly wrecked. Within a half minute the three buildings were wrapped in flames.

TWENTY-ONE DEAD.

Fearful Explosion Occurs in a Silesian Mine.

An explosion occurred in a coal mine at Wrangel, Prussian Silesia, last Monday, causing the death of a large number of workmen.

Twenty-one dead and seventy injured persons have been taken out of the mine, and in addition to the dead and injured accounted for, seventeen others are missing.

Discharging Commissioners.

An order has been sent out by Judges Lurton and Clarke requesting the resignations of all the United States commissioners of eastern and middle Tennessee. The order was mailed out from Knoxville last Tuesday by Clerk H. H. Taylor, and will, it is said, result in about thirty republicans being cut off, as the democrats will all be reappointed.

A MEMORY.

BY J. F. V. KOONS.

Above our heads the robin sang,
And heaven was in his throat,
The orchard with his music rang;
But sweeter than his note
Were loving words that banished gloom,
As sunshine does the mist,
While snowy drifts of apple bloom
Our upturned faces kissed.
Such moments are the flowers of time.
The immortelles of life,
That linger like a tuneful rhyme,
And lull its waves of strife.

DOESN'T SEE ME.

BY J. F. HOWARD.

When a block away she looks at her nose;
And then at some window's display;
And as she comes nearer each step she acts queerer,
But has not seen me to-day.

When a block away she looks at her nose;
At her toes, when two doors away;
And then with surprise she lifts her dark eyes
And bids me a smiling "good-day."

A WEIRD MYSTERY

—OR—

Tracing a Dark Crime.

BY ALEXANDER ROBINSON, M. D.

CHAPTER XXI.

MAN never knows what he is capable of until he tries.

This truism was fully exemplified in my own case. Had I been told a week before that I would turn detective, neglect my patients, lose my sleep, seek adventure, and even associate with criminals—well, I would have assuredly considered my informant out of his mind.

Looking back, I could see how naturally I had fallen into my present position.

There was nothing strange about it.

From the start I had been governed by circumstances, backed by the desire to ward off the tangled suspicion that seemed determined to weave itself around the fair girl of the bereaved house, Leonore.

Yes, there was much of the old knight-errant spirit within me. I was ready to perform wonders, if possible, in the interest of beauty and goodness.

Once I got deep into the mystery, I became so intensely interested that it must have been something very important that would have caused me to relinquish my hold.

I was in for it now.

With reference to this man, I resolved not to waste time. He was in my power in one sense, and I was grimly determined to learn what he knew.

Strategy could be employed, and was even more likely to breed success than any show of force.

That was my candid opinion, after studying the man more thoroughly with whom I was to cope.

The time had now seemingly arrived for me to begin operations.

When I looked around the old tomb and saw its dismal interior I turned to my companion, with a smile.

"Do you mean to say, Colonel, this is the best hiding place you could find?"

"It's safe, ain't it?"

"Well, if you mean that it will never be found out I reckon you're right. Detectives or police officers seldom think of pursuing a man beyond the grave."

"That's just what I want—security. If I was after comfort I'd have gone to another place, which I know will be searched before the setting of another sun, but when I want to defy the whole raft of 'em I come here."

"I don't say that I admire your choice, but it might suit some men."

"It suits me, Joslyn. Mind, I don't expect you to stay here."

"I'll stand it all I can, Colonel. You may make use of me. I can bring you food and the daily papers."

"That will be all I shall ask of you, and consider myself lucky to have such a friend."

"Do you know, I never dreamed of the existence of this old cemetery."

"Few people know of it, and yet thousands of the oldest families are represented here, hundreds at least. The place has been forgotten by those who did know of it, and no public curiosity has been aroused for quite a long time. Some day New York will be astonished to read that a cemetery lies right in the heart of the city, inclosed by houses and high walls."

"Of course it is unused now, and doubtless has been for many years."

"Don't you believe it. Bodies are privately received here from time to time."

"The deuce you say! How do you know?"

"Well, in two ways: First of all, I have seen a body brought in here on the sly; I took it. Then, again, I've been in the receiving vault and discovered that some ten or twenty coffins were piled up there, which, I fully believe, contained bodies sent on and held for lack of funds to bury them with."

I was horrified at the revelation.

The idea of such poisonous atmosphere in the heart of Gotham! It was enough to alarm any doctor.

Then the Colonel told me how, during an earlier visit to the place, he had found it by accident while being pursued by the police.

In the course of his investigations he had managed to enter the dead-house, where he was at once assailed by a fearful odor, and saw the sight he described to me.

He had never spoken of it to a single soul, for he did not want public attention directed toward the inclosed cemetery, for such a thing would spoil his hiding place.

While he was talking I had been revolving the matter over in my mind.

How could I approach the subject that interested me most?

It did not take me long to make up my mind, and I simply watched until the conversation seemed to naturally drift into the desired channel—though of course I had something to do with sending it there.

We began to talk of future plans, and the Colonel told me several things he hoped to do later on.

In return I made one or two suggestions that might be of profit, casually mentioning a certain one in particular.

"There's a house that I've been looking at for some time. I believe the old man's got plenty of ducats hidden away. It's a queer old place; looks like it might be haunted, but it would be the finest crib to crack I know of. Now there are only four people around the place, three besides the old doctor."

"Old doctor!" he ejaculated.

"Why, yes, the proprietor of the house that sets in the grounds, old Dr. Seabury."

He gave a quick start, and I heard him utter a cry.

"Confusion! Joslyn, the devil himself couldn't tempt me to enter that house again."

Ah! the secret was partly out. He owned to having been there.

I repressed the exultation that very naturally came to me, and played my part.

"Hallo! what do you know about the house of Dr. Seabury, Colonel?"

"A good deal," he replied, compressing his lips, while a frown appeared on his forehead.

"Then you've been there?"

"Once too often."

"Come, Colonel, this knocks me. What's to hinder our making the old Doctor tell where he hides his gold."

"Dr. Seabury is dead."

I gave signs of intense surprise.

"Why, my plans have been arranged from away back, but that floors me completely. I knock under. Dr. Seabury dead! Why, I saw him only two days ago, and he appeared in good health. I called on him in the guise of a gentleman who invested property, and had quite a chat, during which I managed to pick up several points that would have been valuable had I been allowed to carry out my plan. He must have been taken very suddenly?"

"He was. Read the papers, Joslyn, and you'll learn something about it, not as much as I could tell you if I wanted to, but enough to learn the story."

I was very near the truth this time, and resolved to make a further effort ere allowing it to slip from my grasp.

"The Doctor was rather queer in his way, don't you think so, Colonel?"

I could see he was visibly worked up, his face even showing alarm.

"So they say," he answered, shortly.

Not baffled yet, I returned to the attack.

"I can't understand how it was you didn't make a haul. If I had ever gotten into a house it would be short work with it."

The man looked at me with sudden shrewdness.

"Did I say I had been in that house?"

"I understood so."

"Then forget it. I deny anything of the sort."

Here was a dilemma.

I had not expected him to get so suspicious or alarmed. He had suddenly come to his senses, and bethought himself that the least said with regard to this matter the sooner mended.

Whatever it might be that he knew about the murder, it was quite evident that he did not mean to confide it to me.

My intention was strengthened by defeat.

I saw that it was worth while working this mine. The truth would come out at some time, and I believed that by force or persuasion this man could be made to tell all he knew.

One means had failed—should I bring the other to bear upon him?

This was a sober question, and one that I did not care to decide without further amount of reflection.

There seemed no other [illegible]ing the matte[illegible] was almost re[illegible] myself into the breach when something occurred to throw me off the track again for a time.

The Colonel gave a start, and suddenly blew out the candle.

"Why did you do that?" I asked.

"Unless my ears deceived me I heard the iron gate clang to," he replied.

"What am I to understand from that?"

"Some one has entered the walled-in cemetery. Perhaps they are bearing a coffin in."

We proceeded to investigate, and I could not but believe something strange was to happen.

CHAPTER XXII.

There was one thing about the sepulcher which perhaps I have failed to remark to you, and as this will presently come before the reader, the sooner this is told the better the sequence will be understood.

It was more than the ordinary tomb, being some ten feet square, back of which were a number of holes looking like large Dutch ovens.

These niches were intended each to hold a coffin.

Two of them were sealed up, but there were several still yawning open.

On one side were about four old boxes with lids upon them.

They were shipping cases for coffins that had been tumbled in here at odd times.

We had been seated upon one of them while engaged in conversation.

When we sprang to the entrance of the tomb, and opening the door, peeped up over the top of the steps, our eyes were at once attracted by a moving light.

It was close to the ground, and appeared at intervals from behind tombs and gravestones so thickly planted here.

"A lantern!" I ventured.

"Yes; there can be no doubt of that, and moving this way."

Looking closer I could see figures behind the party who carried the lantern.

A sudden suspicion flashed through my mind that the officers whom we had given the slip earlier in the night had tracked us to the old walled-in cemetery, and that they were advancing to seize their prey.

This thought gave me a shock. Before I could communicate the idea to Cain he had spoken again.

"By Jove! a night burial, Joslyn."

"You don't mean it?"

"Well, I got a glimpse just then of men carrying a coffin. Look!"

Sure enough; they were so close now that as the view was no longer interrupted and the lantern held a little higher, we could see four men following the leader, holding a coffin between them.

"Are they taking it to the dead-house?" I asked, quickly.

"I don't think so. The place seemed full. Besides, it don't lie in this direction."

"They are heading straight this way."

"That is true."

"Colonel, what if they should intend to put it in here?"

My low words startled him.

"It can hardly be possible?"

"But if we should find it so when it is too late to run?"

"Then we would have to hide."

"By crawling into the man-holes?"

"Great Cæsar, no! By utilizing a couple of those boxes, and pulling the lids over us."

"Well, it's my impression we shall have to come to that yet. See, they are close at hand, and still aim this way."

Even my companion began to see that this was the case

"Joslyn, as sure as I live I believe you are right. We must hide."

There was no time to be lost. Already the man with the lantern was so close that the light fell on us.

Should our suspicions prove true we would just have time to carry out our plan, if everything went well.

Without any loss of time we hurried into the vault. Groping our way across it we came to the first box.

The lid of this was hastily whipped off.

"Into it, Joslyn," said the Colonel, huskily.

I obeyed orders to the letter. This was no time for squeamishness.

"If by any chance they knock the lid off play dead," with which remark he clapped the rough pine lid over me.

I could hear him at the next box, for my hearing seemed to be preternaturally keen. Possibly it was the peculiarity of my position that rendered it so.

A scraping sound announced that he was clawing at the lid to get it over him, and that he finally succeeded I judged from the fact of sudden silence falling on the place.

We had finished none too soon.

Already the man bearing the lantern was descending the slippery stone steps leading to the sepulcher.

He pushed open the door, which we had neglected to fasten.

"This way, men. Now, be careful. We do not want any accident."

The four bearers slowly descended with their burden, all entering the tomb.

I could feel my nerves quivering, such was the singular nature of the position in which I found myself. Perhaps I was now experiencing something that had come to many persons in a more aggravated form upon finding themselves buried alive—a feeling of horror akin to despair.

"Put it down, men."

Some one moved the box in which I was lying, but only a little. It offered more resistance than he had expected.

"There, some of you lend a hand. Move this box yonder so that we can use the two of them for horses. Now lift the coffin and rest it across, so."

I groaned, but the sound appeared to be taken as a snort from one of the men, as they leaned over me.

We were trapped, shut into boxes, and with a heavy weight resting on the lids.

The air seemed to become suddenly dense to me so that I could hardly breathe.

True, we had escaped discovery, but a disaster that seemed to be a great deal worse had now come upon us.

The men prepared to leave the vault. I could hardly restrain from calling out after them—indeed, my mouth was open to do so when I thought better of it.

We were left alone with the dead.

I made an effort to raise the lid from my box, but did not succeed. The narrow space would not allow a man to bring anything like his full strength to bear on the subject.

One thing was fortunate, I thought. A small corner of the lid near my head had been broken off.

This left an opening large enough for a full supply of air to come through.

When I remember[illegible] this, my spirits arose, for I [illegible] was not to be su[illegible]ed, at any rate.

[illegible]at was the Colonel hailing me. His voice sounded from the depths of the earth, and seemed sepulchral enough to fully suit the occasion.

"Hallos! Colonel, how goes it?" I answered, thinking that the occasion might be helped by a little levity, for my spirits were very near the zero point.

"This is a nice pickle."

"How the deuce are we to get out?"

"I don't know. Can't you move your lid?"

"Not an inch."

"That's bad. If I could only get a grip on the thing I'd budge it."

His words gave me an idea.

I managed to twist my arm around so that my hand passed to the end of the box.

Here was the hole spoken of before.

My fingers went through, and I got something of a clutch on the thing. Could I succeed in moving it?

There was nothing like trying it, and defeat would not leave me any worse off than I had been before.

I strained every muscle, and made one heroic effort.

The result was not wholly satisfactory, and yet I felt the lid move.

Changing my tactics I attempted to shove it to one side, meeting with better success.

There was now room enough to get hold with both hands, and I felt that the matter was really settled.

"Colonel, I'm working it out. Have patience for a little while, and be surprised at nothing."

"Hurrah!" he faintly cried, and I began to believe he was feeling the lack of air.

This made me work faster, for although my own immunity was secured, I did not wish my companion to suffer, for he was of value to me.

I pushed the obstinate cover of the box slowly to one side, until at length I was able to sit up.

Then you may be sure I crawled out of that place in a hurry.

I had not been able to see any of the men who brought the coffin in, and yet it had struck me that the voice of one was familiar even when heard so indistinctly.

I could not place him, and at this time could not bother thinking over the matter.

When I crawled out of the box, my first duty was to strike a match. I had a piece of candle in my pocket that the cracksman had given me, and this I lighted.

"Colonel, are you all right still?"

A groan answered me. The man was slowly suffocating, the lid of the box fitting closer than he had ever dreamed.

I sprang to his relief. It was the work of a few seconds to pull the lid to one side and allow the air to enter.

Before this I had sniffed the musty atmosphere of the tomb with positive disgust, but my opinion of it had undergone something of a change.

It was precious now.

Colonel Cain immediately revived, and in two minutes was sitting up.

I helped him out of the box that had almost been his coffin.

He sat on it, holding his head between his hands.

"That was a close call, Joslyn."

"For you it certainly was. Did you ever see such luck we have for getting into peculiar scrapes?"

"And luckily getting out again."

"That is true."

"But I don't understand how you managed to escape."

"This explains it. I got a purchase on the lid by means of this hole. The rest was easy enough."

"Then we owe a good deal to the small fact of there being a hole at the end of your coffin, Joslyn."

"It looks that way, Colonel. When I could move the lid a little, I came to a knowledge of the fact that you were suffering for want of air.

"This hurried me up somewhat, and I made a grand effort that resulted in the liberation of both."

He had about recovered himself now, and yet there was a trembling about his knees as he arose, by which I realized what a shock his nerves had sustained.

Perhaps this would be a good time to open my line of attack.

The thought came to me with an abruptness that was rather paralyzing, and yet I could readily comprehend that it meant more than appeared on the surface.

While the idea was yet floating before my mind, not having then positive shape I saw my companion bend over the head of the coffin that had just been brought in.

It was a plain, heavy, substantial affair. I had seen many like it for use in a crypt.

At the head was a sheet of thick plate-glass, showing the face of the deceased.

This glass was about a foot square, and fitted into the lid so that it was positively air-tight.

When I saw the Colonel bend over, holding the piece of candle in his hand, I did not think it was the hand of fate that beckoned him on, but an idle curiosity who among the city's old inhabitants had expressed a desire to be buried in the walled-in cemetery.

I supposed the dead person belonged to some old family like the Astors or Bleeckers, and that it was desired to lay the body beside those who had been dear in life.

Hence, although my eyes followed Colonel Cain, it was with the same idle curiosity that I believed him guilty of.

Had a shock of electricity been hurled upon us we could not have sprung into more active life.

I was influenced, of course, by the action of the Colonel.

He uttered a sharp cry, and I saw a look of intense surprise and horror leap into his face, as his eyes became glued upon the object in the coffin.

I sprang to my feet, interested by his action, for he seemed to be waving off some spirit hand that was trying to grasp his throat.

"Great powers! It is he!"

As a sudden thought flashed into my brain, I sprang forward and took the burning candle from his unresisting hand.

Then I bent over the coffin.

My suspicions were realized! A strange fate had brought about this climax, for under the plate-glass I saw the white beard and well-known features of Dr. Seabury.

CHAPTER XXIII.

The horrified manner of the cracksman was now fully explained.

In his present condition, when his nerves were out of shape, [illegible] had given him a terrible sh[illegible] suddenly set eyes upon [illegible] of the dead doctor.

Why?

Either because his hand was red with his blood, or else some terrible picture was called up in his mind by the spectacle now before his vision.

That was what I was present for—what I had stuck to him like a leech for, passing through various dangers—to learn the truth.

Now was my time.

I would never know a better.

He had become terribly demoralized by the unexpected appearance of Dr. Seabury's body on the scene, and was in a condition when his mind could be most readily reached by a threat.

One of my plans had failed—I had been unable to tempt him into confiding the truth to me.

The other must be tried, and this was the time for it.

"Bless my soul, if it isn't the Doctor!" I exclaimed, as though astounded.

He shook his head in feeble assent, having seated himself upon a box.

"This is one of the most singular things I ever heard of. In fact it looks suspicious. Why should the body of Dr. Seabury haunt us? What had we to do with his death?"

Colonel Cain groaned.

His face was white as chalk, and his knees seemed to knock together, showing greater evidence of fright than I had ever thought him capable of.

"It's me he's after, Joslyn," he muttered.

"The deuce you say. Why should he be after you, man alive?"

"You forget, man, I was in his house the night he died."

His eyes seemed burning in their sockets, and his breath came thick and hot.

Was this a tacit admission to the effect that he had been concerned in the death of the old physician?

I could hardly take it as such, and yet there was undoubtedly a bearing that way. The alarm of the burglar at sight of the dead man, his fear of the police, and the presence of a crease in his room and now on his person as an evidence he wished to hide—all these things served to make hope spring up in my soul again.

What if he should confess the truth—that he was guilty of the crime?

I would have to take him into custody and turn him over to the proper officials.

Then I could seek Mr. Ketcham and let him know that the drama had been ended virtually without his assistance.

In imagination I pictured myself as quietly telling him that I had run the murderer down, got him to confess the whole truth, and that he was now safely caged in the Tombs.

The very thought was exhilarating. I drew a quick breath, and then came to my senses. As yet I was a long way from reaching that point. Some delicate work was yet to be done before I could truly say that I had the matter down fine.

One thing was in my favor.

Colonel Cain was in splendid condition to be brought to terms.

His recent experience with that dread agent of death—suffocation—and the shock received from setting eyes on the dead doctor, had unnerved him far more than any threat of personal violence could do.

The populist of this section are about equal in their abuse of the Montgomery Advertiser and the Birmingham State-Herald. They hate one about as bad as the other. How Johnston can influence the populite vote is hard to find out.

This talk of Johnston influencing the populite vote is all bosh. While it is true the advocates most of the populite ideas, they would no more vote for him than a sound money democrat. The fact is the populites care nothing for the free coinage of silver, or any other measure. These ideas are preached to them, by their leaders, for no other purpose than to give an excuse for apposing the democartic party. The republican leaders of the so called populist party would have a fit if they thought there was any danger that these ideas would be carried out. Johnston will have to openly join the populite ranks in order to gain any votes from that misguided class.

Now is the winter of our discontent.
Made glorious summer by this son of Clarke.

As was predicted by the VIEW, Hon. R. H. Clarke, when called on by his party, responded to the summons. He has formally announced himself a candidate for governor, and no stronger man could be put in the field. The white and black counties will vie with each other to see who can give him the largest majorities. To say he is the candidate of the black belt would be erroneous, for he is a man whose influence extends throughout the entire State, and is not limited to any particular section. The democrats of this county are almost unanimous in declaring him their choice, for governor. His splendid record in Congress, coupled with his earnest work for his party at home stamps him as the highest type of a democrat and one who is well worthy to bear the standard of that glorious party. That he will be nominated there can be no doubt, for the rank and file, all over the State, have only been waiting for the time to come when some good man, opposed to the party pandering Johnston, would announce himself as a candidate. The time has come and the man is here.

The Johnston boom is dead.

It has passed into history, slain by the candidacy of Hon. R. H. Clarke, of Mobile. Swiftly its hours have glided by, borne on the great tide of fanaticism into the boundless ocean of ignomy. It has entered the charnel house of the past, gone to join the line of demagogue schemes which have preceded it, and naught now remains to tell of its existence but the record of the historian, and the disaffection it has caused between those who were formerly political friends.

The dragon was fierce in its day, and breathed both fire and smoke from its nostrils, but a new champion has risen in the South, and at the mention of his doughty name, the venom of the beast evaporated.

The Johnston boom is dead.

"No further seek its merits to disclose,
Nor draw its frailties from their dread abode."

Doubtless there will be some who are unaware that the war is over, who will try to convince everyone that the boom is not a corpse, but as the days roll by the fact will become too evident to admit of denial; and even they will have to succumb to the inevitable. The Johnston boom is dead.

R-quiescat in pace.

The Birmingham News, in trying to defend itself for supporting a man for governor, who has done all he could to disrupt the democratic party in Alabama, makes a startling error. It says, or at least that is the natural inference, that after Gov. Oates had been importuned by many of the foremost democrats of the State to become a candidate for re-election, Capt. Johnston announced himself on the free silver ticket. If the News will take time to think, it will remember that Johnston announced himself long before he ever found out that Gov. Oates would refuse a renomination, democratic precedent to the contrary, nor does any one doubt that he would have been a candidate even if the govern or had consented to run.

The News further proclaims that it will support Johnston for the sake of harmony. Ye gods! when will this harmony business end? It reminds us of a story we heard in the long ago. Perhaps we dreamed it.

A gentleman detected a member of his own household, to wit: the butler, in an act of dishonesty, and discharged him. Some time later the gentleman advertised for a valet, and among the applicants was this selfsame butler.

"What do you mean by coming here for employment?, asked the gentleman. "Didn't I discharge you for dishonesty, and tell you never to put your out on this place again?"

"Yes," replied the butler "but since that time I have become president of the Servants Protective Association, and if you do not give me employment, you will have to wait on yourself, for I will make all your servants leave."

He was pointed out on the toe of the gentleman's boot, as he should have been.

So much for Johnston's harmony

Many people think newspaper men persistant dunners. By the way of comparison, let us suppose that a farmer raises a thousand ushels of wheat a year, and sells this out to one thousand persons in all parts of the country, a great portion of them saying: "I will hand you the dollar in a short time." The farmer dont want to be small and says all right. Soon he 1,000 bushels are gone but he has nothing to show for it, and he then realizes that he has frittered away his whole crop and that its value to him is due him in a thousand little drillets, consequently he is seriously embarrassed in his business because his debtors each owing him $1, treat it as a small matter, and think it would not hhlp much. Continue this kind of business year in and year out as the publisher does, how long would he stand it? A moments thought will convince any one that the publisher has cause for persistant dunning.—Heartselle Enquirer.

ADVERTISING AS A SCIENCE PAYS.

Some people say that advertising is all a matter of belief in that you cannot tell what advertising is going to do, or whether or not it is going to pay. This may be true, but it is very strange that the man who gives intelligent thought to his advertising, and it in an intelligent, earnest, straightforward way usually has the luck on his side. He is lucky in his advertising, because he reduced it to a science. Advertising is just as certain as paying rent. Advertising is governed by the same common sense business lines that govern buying lot of tomatoes or codfish.—Grocery World.

ALL DEBTORS NOT DISHONEST,

Free Silver Means That Creditors Are to Lose 50 Per Cent.

Is the proposition for "free silver at 16 to 1" expedient and honest?

Stripped of verbiage, the proposition is for this government to embark in the immediate and unlimited coinage of silver dollars, each dollar to contain approximately 50 cents worth of silver bullion; to discard all provisions for guaranteeing the concurrent circulation and parity of gold and silver, and to compel by law the acceptance of the new dollars in payment of all debts.

The object is to reduce the value of the dollar about one-half, and by forcing creditors to take this dollar for debts to scale all existing obligations. The only exception will be where the shrewd creditor has stipulated for payment in gold. Such creditor will be paid in full, but the unsuspecting man or woman who has merely trusted to the honor of the nation is to be "done up," just in proportion as the dollar is scaled.

The Populists are solid for this scheme. It's in their line of business. They are opposed to a dollar having any intrinsic value, but if they must have a dollar worth anything at all the less it is worth the better it suits them. Very few Republicans take any stock in the scheme, and the more it is studied the sooner it will be dropped by all thinking men.

The agitators assume, because Kansas people are in debt, that every Kansas man ought to join in the clamor for such dollars. I deny that it is the duty of any man, because he lives in Kansas and is in debt, to favor a scheme which his conscience tells him is wrong.

I am as much in debt as the average Kansan, but I cannot see why this fact should blind the conscience or destroy the ability of a man to reason on such questions. I believe in bimetallism and in the use of the largest volume of silver as standard money which can be maintained at a parity with our gold and paper money, so that all of our dollars will be equal for all purposes. But the Harvey programme is merely a scheme to scale our standard dollar—in which all contracts have been made—for the purpose of robbing creditors.

If these agitators simply wanted to cheapen the dollars for use in future business transactions, they would advocate a law making the new dollars legal tender for future debts only. But that's not what they want. They insist that these new cheap dollars must be made a legal tender for all debts.

I am opposed to that because it is dishonest. If anybody can prove that it is honest, I will be glad to be for it. But he must prove it by some better argument than the threadbare assertion that John Sherman conspired with the Rothschilds to rob innocent people 20 years ago, for even if that idiotic statement were true it would be no reason why you and I should conspire to rob a much larger number of equally innocent people today.—George L. Douglass in Kansas City Star.

Red Riding Hood Up to Date.

"But, grandma, what long, stiff ears you have got?"

"The better to hear what you say, my darling," said the wolf, and his eyes glared greener than ever.

"What large green eyes you have got, grandma!" said little Red Riding Hood, so frightened she knew not what to say.

"The better to see you with, my child," chuckled the wolf, showing his ugly teeth.

"Grandma, what a large mouth, and, oh, what big teeth you have got!"

"Ah, ah, ah, the better to tear you to pieces and eat you with," said the wolf, throwing off his disguise.

The Song of Silver,

Ceres and Zeus and Odin, all gods of the land and the sea,
And Pan, so beloved of the ancients, could not "hold a candle" to me,
For I am acclaimed for vast worship in spite of my plebeian birth,
With the scepter I lift for your homage I propose to encircle the earth.

Is not Mexico blessed by my oiyness, and China my prophetess too?
Is there ever a lack(s) of white rupees held back from the heathen Hindoo?
The reason strong nations deride me and will not come into my fold,
Is because the cantankerous English "stuck" on the value of gold.

I hate that pernicious intruder of yellow Mongolian hue,
And "the deuce" I shall raise when my missions secure the joint standard of "two."
We call it a scheme of great promise, for the people delightfully planned,
But you'll notice when once it is going it is I who will govern the land.

If the public is anxious as prosper and revel in dollars galore,
Unless it be copper and iron, what make can multiply more?
It is true the bright leaves of October, if backed by the government's word,
Might quicken me a little—but that would (perhaps) be a trifle absurd.

I think my apostles have shown what a glorious queen I should be
Had they not themselves taken a part in "the crime of the year 73."
For if congress had sworn to my value and clung to the cult that was old
I shouldn't be kicked now from contracts my courtiers themselves write in gold.

Let my foes call me "it" if they wish to, like things that inanimate be,
My lackeys know better and bow to the ironus, adorable "Me."
I'm not in their eyes merely neuter, a part of the rocks and the ground,
I'm a being you mustn't "dishonor," a queen to be coddled and crowned.

Measures of Values.

A dollar is not a measure of length, breadth, thickness or weight, but of value. A measure of length, breadth and thickness must have standard length in order to be a true measure. A measure of weight must have true weight, but when it comes to considering what shall be the requisite quality of a measure of value the free silver people say that value is of no moment, remarks the Mobile Register; that if it have a certain name stamped on it and be called a true measure of value. This is as absurd as would be an attempt to call a yard stick of 30 inches a true measure of length, or a pound of ten ounces weight a true measure of weight. The only true measure of value is a measure which contains full value. Any other sort of a measure which is offered as a true measure is false and will be rejected by the people.—Floridian.

There is no medicine so often needed in every home and so admirably adapted to the purposes for which it is intended, as Chamberlain's Pain Balm. Hardly a week passes but some member of the family has need of it. A toothache or headache may be cured by it. A touch of rheumatism or neuralgia quieted. The severe pain of a burn or scald promptly relieved and the sore healed in much less time than when medicine has to be sent for. A sprain may be promptly treated before inflammation sets in, which insures a cure in about one-third of the time otherwise required. Cuts and bruises should receive immediate treatment before the parts become swollen, which can only be done when Pain Balm is kept at hand. A sore throat may be cured before it becomes serious. A troublesome corn may be removed by applying it twice a day for a week or two. A lame back may be cured and several days of valuable time saved or a pain in the side or chest relieved without paying a doctor bill. Procure a 50 cent bottle at once and you will never regret it. A BIMETALLIST'S OPINION.

Dr. Andrews of Brown University Answers a Pertinent Question.

Perhaps the most scholarly, intellectual and honest of the bimetallists is the president of Brown university. He was one of the delegates from this country to the international monetary conference held at Brussels in 1892 and is an ardent advocate of the wider use of silver. But he sees the folly and danger of attempting the impossible—at least when one nation attempts it single handed. The following is Dr. Andrews' reply, published in the Chicago Record, to the question, "Shall the United States attempt the free coinage of silver alone?"

"If we take up the metal alone, and that course results as I should anticipate in the expulsion of gold, we shall have in the first place a financial crisis worse than any ever suffered in the country. This because we cannot in a long time, even by working our mints day and night, coin silver enough to take the place which would be vacated by gold. Prices would surely fall. Immense numbers of failures would occur. Laborers would be thrown out of work. Altogether a dreadful paroxysm in our business would be precipitated. Slowly the gap left by gold would be filled by the mining and coinage of silver. Prices would then gradually rise. At last they would become higher than now, more and more approaching the Mexican and Japanese level.

"But a consequence far worse than any of these would be that our passage to a silver basis would erect against foreign exchange between Europe and the United States just such a barrier as now exists between Europe and Mexico. It would annihilate all fixed par between New York and London, repeating the terrible inconvenience in our European exchanges which we suffered in war times when we were upon a paper basis."

Chargeable to the Silver Agitation.

Every holder of land, bonds, notes, securities or property of any kind, which has decreased in value since Jan. 1, 1893, can justly charge the greater part of this loss to the "friends of silver." Every laborer thrown out of employment during this time, or who has suffered a reduction of wages as a result of this panic, can justly charge his loss of wages to the same source.

These disasters are made none the less cruel and oppressive by the fact that the silver party did not intend the result. This country has suffered as much and perhaps more from the "free silver" movement than it would have suffered from a great foreign war, excepting the loss of life. The losses of a war in a just cause might not only be borne with fortitude, but be considered glorious sacrifices. "The losses of property and wages which have come from an "honest" effort to "help silver" and the silver miners are as real as those of war and must be borne under the conviction that they are the result of an inconceivable folly.—R. Weissinger in "What Is Money?"

Nervous Prostration

Cured by Dr. Miles' Nervine.

Prolonged derangement of the nervous system not only affects the brain and mental powers, but develops disease in some of the vital organs. The most dangerous of these indirect results is when the heart is affected. This was the case of the Rev. N. [illegible] Surface, Fawn River, Mich., who writes date of Feb. 10, 1895:

"Fourteen years ago I had a slight stroke of paralysis. Overwork brought on nervous prostration. I was exceedingly nervous and the exertion of public speaking caused heart palpitation that threatened my life. I used two bottles of Dr. Miles' New Heart Cure for my heart trouble, and two of Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine for my nervousness and feel better than I ever expected to feel again. I can speak for hours without tiring or having my heart flutter as it formerly did, and I have you to thank that I am alive today."

CASTORIA

for Infants and Children.

MOTHERS, Do You Know that Paregoric, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, many so-called Soothing Syrups, and most remedies for children are composed of opium or morphine?

Do You Know that opium and morphine are stupefying narcotic poisons?

Do You Know that in most countries druggists are not permitted to sell narcotics without labeling them poisons?

Do You Know that you should not permit any medicine to be given your child unless you or your physician know of what it is composed?

Do You Know that Castoria is a purely vegetable preparation, and that a list of its ingredients is published with every bottle?

Do You Know that Castoria is the prescription of the famous Dr. Samuel Pitcher. That it has been in use for nearly thirty years, and that more Castoria is now sold than of all other remedies for children combined?

Do You Know that the Patent Office Department of the United States, and of other countries, have issued exclusive right to Dr. Pitcher and his assigns to use the word "Castoria" and its formula, and that to imitate them is a state prison offense?

Do You Know that one of the reasons for granting this government protection was because Castoria had been proven to be absolutely harmless?

Do You Know that 35 average doses of Castoria are furnished for 35 cents, or one cent a dose?

Do You Know that when possessed of this perfect preparation, your children may be kept well, and that you may have unbroken rest?

Well, these things are worth knowing. They are facts.

The fac-simile signature of Chas. H. Fletcher is on every wrapper.

The Free Silver Chimera.

The ridiculous attempt of the silver contingent to commit the United States to free coinage—to the exchange of 50 cents' worth of silver for a dollar in gold—rivals in its absurdity and enthusiasm the wildest chimera of romantic fiction. It carries us back to the fond but futile search for the fountain of everlasting youth, to the mediæval alchemists' theory of the transmutation of metals and to the beautiful mythological story of Midas and the golden touch.—Philadelphia Record.

Limiting the Cotton Crop.

The movement looking to no increase of the cotton acreage next year was inaugurated by the Memphis Cotton Exchange a few days ago at a general meeting called for the purpose. The preamble to the resolution adopted sets forth that a large crop of cotton grown at heavy expense brings but little, if any, larger total value, contrasting 1895 with past years to establish the fact, and adds:

"Another matter for the farmers to bear in mind is that at the present time, when there is a remote possibility of a war, if such should occur, the inevitable result thereof would be to depreciate the value of cotton and appreciate the value of all food crops: Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Memphis Cotton Exchange urgently recommends to the producers that the production of home supplies be made the first consideration in planting operations for the coming year, and that the acreage of cotton be not increased over that of last year.

"Resolved, That we approve and endorse the American Cotton Growers' Association for bringing about the reduction in the acreage of the crop now being marketed, and we respectfully urge the Hon. Hector D. Lane, the president, and his coadjutators, the presidents of the various cotton states of said association, to continue in the good work, and to take up the matter at the earliest possible moment, and urge it again upon the attention of the cotton producers of the south.

"Resolved, That the various cotton exchanges throughout the south be and are hereby requested to co-operate with this exchange in this matter, and that the southern newspapers are also requested to publish these resolutions."

The inspectors of the board of health of Pittsburg, Pa., have recently discovered the most astounding adulterations of the ordinary articles of food, such as coffee, vinegar and pepper. Ground coffee was found to consist of about one-half of the genuine article, the other half being a mixture of chicory and bran. Vinegar was fearfully and wonderfully made of acetic acid and water and pepper was a compound equally remarkable for the absence of pepper.

THE FAIR CLOSES.

ATLANTA'S GREAT EXPOSITION IS NO MORE.

Busy Scenes Enacted Up to the Last Moment.

The Cotton States and International Exposition came to a close at midnight Tuesday night.

The wind whistled desolately about the huge buildings and sounded a solemn funeral dirge. All was dark save the intermittent flashes of the red and green beacon light on the lake. The flags fluttered ghost-like about the tall poles. Grand, gloomy and peculiar, the stately structures wherein the holiday throngs had feted for the past three months, loomed up against the black sky and the silent statues stood like sheeted sentinels silhouetted against the towering terraces.

Suddenly a note of warning pealed forth from the chimes tower. It was midnight. Silently, solemnly it stroked the hour of twelve. It was like a doleful dirge of death. The old year was gone. The Cotton States and International exposition was no more.

All day long the gay crowds had thronged the grounds. The realization that the fair was passing away came to all Atlanta people. They went out—an immense crowd—to get a last look at the place where the great events of the year have transpired, to behold the beauty of the grounds once more before dissolution set in. Eagerly, restlessly they wandered from building to building looking earnestly at everything, spurring themselves on to keen enjoyment, whipping up their exposition enthusiasm for the last time, giving their spirits a final spurt. It was all passing away. The end was near. Knowing this the crowd rushed eagerly from one place to another. The people wanted to see everything once more. Thousands of Atlantians were out. From other cities large delegations had come, and everywhere was gayety. In the afternoon the crowd increased. Those who could not get off during the morning hurried to the grounds and joined in the general merriment.

It was a busy time with those who have been on the grounds since the opening of the exposition. The exhibitors were making final preparations to get away. They filled the office of the president in their eagerness to get permits to remove their goods. Farewells were being said. There was unusual activity in all of the state buildings.

To the Last Minute.

While there was great excitement over all the grounds during the day, still the show was run up to the last minute without a hitch. Until 10 o'clock at night every guard and every employe remained at his post. The crowds remained on the grounds later than usual. In spite of the bitter cold the people strolled about the grounds, loath to leave. Orders had been issued to have the gates closed at 10 o'clock. Promptly at that hour they were locked and the day came to an end.

It was the closing of the greatest event of the south. "But," said President Collier, "this is the nominal end of the exposition. The real [illegible] ed; the result will go on. The [illegible] like a stone will increase with the years [illegible] Cotton States and International exposi[illegible] go on forever."

FAIR FIGURES.

What the Atlanta Exposition Did Financially.

When the cotton exposition gates closed Tuesday night the turnstiles indicated that since the opening day 1,286,863 people had been admitted to the grounds. Of this number there were 817,028 paid admissions, including adults and children.

This statement is according to the report kept in the office of Mr. C. M. Felder, who has been the chief inspector of the exposition and who has made the reports of the turnstile readings to the officials.

The total figures include the admissions at the pass gates, paid admission gates and the wagon gates, through which the soldiers and invited guests have passed.

The following is a detail statement of the attendance:

Adults, paid admissions.....	738,115
Children, paid admissions...	79,813
Passes.....	434,935
Wagon gates.....	35,000

According to the best reports obtainable today the exposition company has realized from the paid admissions, $354,072.95.

The percentage received through the concession department is figured at $115,654.32 and this added to the gate receipts make the total receipt from these sources since the exposition opened $479,727.27, but there are other sources to hear from.

According to the statement of Mr. S. M. Inman, who has handled the financial department of the exposition for some time, the total receipts of the exposition company will approximate a million and a quarter dollars while the expenditures were not above these figures. Mr. Inman is thoroughly conversant with the affairs of the exposition and has made the following statement about its finances:

"We cannot give a detailed statement of the finances of the company, but will be able to do so in a few days, but the receipts of the company will approximate a million and a quarter of dollars.

"This only covers the amount handled by the exposition company. We cannot tell yet how we will dispose of the exposition effects, but will adopt some plan to dispose of them to the best advantage. This has been a three million dollar exposition, but that amount has not been expended by the company."

Thirty People Drowned.

A dispatch to the Paris Figaro from Algiers says that by the sinking of the French steamer Emile-Heloise, through being run down by the British steamer Bellerophon, thirty of her passengers were drowned instead of four as at first reported.

GROWTH OF THE SOUTH.

The Industrial Condition as Reported for the Past Week.

Reports of industrial and mercantile conditions in all parts of the south for the past week show that the iron production continues to be very large. Irregular prices in the central and western iron regions have not influenced the business of the southern furnaces, where large orders remain to be filled, and the market continues to be steady. Coal is not advancing in price, remaining unchanged at the quotations of the past few weeks and outputs are very large. The local demand increases, and shipments to Mississippi valley points are heavy. All the mines are in full operation, and laborers find plenty of work. Lumbermen report that business is quiet, and that there is some accumulation of stocks, this being the dull season. Cotton is quiet, with moderate sales. There is much difference of opinion as to the quality of cotton still held by planters. It is thought by good judges that many planters who do not need money, having paid their expense accounts, are holding their cotton for higher prices. Southern textile mills are generally in full operation, and many reports are sent out of new mills to be built in the coming spring and summer. The reports as to the condition of mercantile business are that sales are moderate, and that there will be no increase until the usual settlements at this time of the year are completed. The following new industries were established or incorporated during the week: A 100-barrel flouring mill at High Point, N. C., brass foundry at Martinsburg, W. Va., land company at Barnwell, S. C., with a capital of $150,000, and the Equitable Coal company, at Dallas, Texas, capital $30,000. The Nelson Coal and Coke company, capital $50,000, has been chartered at Fairmont, W. Va.; the National Candy company, capital $200,000, at New Orleans, La., and a cotton seed oil mill to cost about $250,000 will also be erected at New Orleans, a new sugar refinery will be located at Grand Ridge, Fla., and the Commercial Lumber company, capital $100,000, has been chartered at Gilmer, Texas. The Tradesman also reports brick works at Hillsboro, N. C., an electric power plant at Charleston, W. Va., chain works at Louisville, Ky., and iron and steel roofing works at Memphis, Tenn. A gold mining company has applied for a charter at Chattanooga; iron mines will be developed near Jellico, Tenn.; a scrap factory will be erected at Tampa, Fla., and a sugar refinery at Enterprise, Miss.

Woodworking plants will be established at Montgomery, Ala., Darien, Ga., Middlesborough, Ky., New Orleans, La., Charleston, S. C., and Martinsburg, W. Va.

Water works will be established at Fairmont, W. Va., at a cost of $100,000.

Business houses will be erected at Knoxville, Tenn., Newport News, Va., and Wheeling, W. Va., and a $30,000 court house at Summerville, W. Va.—Tradesman (Chattanooga, Tenn.)

INCREASE OF FAILURES.

Bradstreet's Has Recorded 13,013 for the Year.

Bradstreet's review of business for the past week, says: As is the rule in Christmas week, wholesale trade has been quiet. The holidays, the close of the year and stock-taking tend to make business slow, and promise only a little trade until after January. In various cities, notably New York, Boston, Baltimore and Chicago, anticipations as to the character of trade early in the coming year, are hopeful but it [illegible] seen whether the downward mo[illegible] and and prices and the delay [illegible] currency on a sound basis, all of which [illegible] to gun to show themselves in trade conditions, will permit of as early and marked gains in staple lines of trade in 1896 as has been confidently anticipated.

Business failures in this country for a completed year number 13,013, an increase in number of failures are at the west, northwest and in the middle states, decreases being shown in New England, at the south and on the Pacific coast.

The quotation for coke has been advanced, as well as those for mohair, wheat, Indian corn, oats and for sugar, while for leather, hides, lumber, coal, wool, coffee and print cloths quotations are unchanged. Reactional reactions are reported in prices of refined petroleum, cotton, pork, flour, iron and steel.

The week's features in commercial lines are a rather better trade in Christmas specialties than expected, smaller business at the west from long continued rains and light stock of goods in hands of retailers, and the pronounced movement of funds from the west to the east, not only to pay interest but because of the better demand for currency at the large financial centers.

THREATENED WAR IN AFRICA.

English Troops Under Jamieson Causing Trouble.

The news from Pretoria, Transvaal republic, in Africa, tends to confirm the gravity of the situation there, growing out of the invasion of the Boer territory by an armed force of the British South Africa company, numbering about 700 men with six Maxim guns, led by Dr. Jamieson, the British commissioner, who was so successful in his operations against King Lobengula.

The Transvaal president, Kruger, has called upon the burghers to defend their country and a serious conflict is anticipated in spite of the fact that the colonial secretary, the Hon. Joseph Chamberlrin, has telegraphed Dr. Jamieson to withdraw into British territory and has urged President Kruger to do his utmost to prevent bloodshed.

Severe Earthquake Shocks.

A severe shock of earthquake was felt at Ciciana, near the city of Nola, in the province of Caserta, Italy, on Sunday. A number of houses were thrown down. Several persons were killed and many others injured.

THERE are some exceptions, but as a rule, when you have nothing to say, it is best to say it silently.

AGRICULTURAL.

TOPICS OF INTEREST RELATIVE TO FARM AND GARDEN.

TILLAGE DESTROYING WEEDS.

It is a mistake to suppose that land devoted to tillage is for that reason more weedy than land left in pasture. It is true there will be more weeds visible in the tilled land, for cultivation enables every seed near the surface to germinate. But in the pasture what weeds do start are apt to be left to mature their seeds. The stock turned in to crop the grass will generally avoid the weeds, and thus a few years of pasturing fills the soil with weed seeds which will make hard work for the cultivator to get rid of.—Boston Cultivator.

HINTS ON FEEDING SILAGE.

In feeding silage it is much better to always feed from the top, and the area of the feeding surface should not be much greater than five square feet for each cow feed. It is a common mistake to have the feeding surface of the silage too large, and under these conditions the silage has time to heat and spoil to some extent. All heating of silage is at the expense of feeding value, and in good silos, after the first heating, the silage cools, and remains cold to the touch for an indefinite time unless again exposed to the air for some days. Silage should be fed after milking. Almost any substance possessing an odor at all marked has a tendency, when fed to the cow just before milking, to have it excreted with the milk at the time of milking. If, however, turnips or silage, etc., are fed after milking, then the odors have time to escape from the blood of the cow, through the lungs, kidneys and skin, before it is again time to milk, and the milk will not be tainted. —American Agriculturist.

FATTENING TURKEYS.

Taking for granted that the turkeys you wish to turn off pretty soon have been under proper feed for the last two months, it is now time to give them the finishing touches. Every pound of fat that can be laid on the bird is profit at the present price of grain.

Shut up those that you wish to keep over or until later in the season, and let those to be fattened have free range (turkeys often grow poor in confinement though they have heaps of food before them), and feed them three or four times a day with potatoes cooked with corn meal, or corn meal mush made with milk, and at night give all the whole corn they will eat; some other grain might be given for a change once or twice.

Do not feed more than they will eat up clean, and let there be as long an interval between the morning meal and the closing meal of the day as daylight will allow.

If the food is dropped by the handful so they will scramble for it, they will eat much more than if it is dumped upon the ground before they are called up.—Farm, Field and Fireside.

THE COW PEA.

The cow pea is highly esteemed by Southern farmers as a crop for plowing under, and also to grow for its forage. An esteemed correspondent writes in a letter published this week, urging its cultivation by Northern farmers as a substitute for clover, [illegible] rather on land where clover cannot be grown. But the time when the cow pea is to be plowed under must always be at the end of the growing season. It requires warmth and a long season to attain maturity. Some of the earlier and smaller varieties might ripen seeds in our Northern States in favorable seasons, but these could not be depended on. The farmer who can grow [illegible] will find it much more satisfactory [illegible] the cow pea. If a large amount of [illegible] is turned under late in the season it will not rot, and much of its nitrogen will be [illegible] away before spring. In most cases [illegible] will probably pay better for those who grow cow peas to cut and feed the forage, thus turning it into manure instead of plowing it under. The plowing can then be left until spring, and after feeding the pea forage, what manure it makes can be spread over the surface.—American Cultivator.

ASPARAGUS AND RHUBARD BEDS.

It is an excellent time to fix the beds of asparagus and rhubarb before the ground is solidly frozen. The beds should be completely cleared of weeds, and a light plowing with the hand plow will do this as quickly as may be done with a horse plow, for only the surface needs to be plowed three inches deep. All the weeds and trash and the old stems are to be removed, then the manure spread evenly until the ground is wholly covered. The same is needed for the rhubarb, except that four or five year-old roots should be taken up and divided and replanted, in addition to the cleaning and manuring of the ground. The stools should then be heaped over with manure and brush, or other protection on this, so that the first warmth of the ground in the spring will start an early growth of some of the roots selected for this purpose.

A supply of this most desirable vegetable may be secured for use in the winter by taking up a few roots and potting them in boxes in the cellar, keeping the soil moist, and thus forcing a growth of stems that will greatly please the housekeeper by the welcome variety of a few of those pleasant tarts and things thus made possible in the dull season.—New York Times.

SOME HINTS FOR FARMERS.

An intelligently conducted country fair supplies means for the interchange of ideas. Here the farmers, gardeners, orchardists and horticulturists can obtain information of interest not to be easily derived by individual efforts. Here the actual results of experiments in plant treatment, stock-breeding, new varieties of fruits and truck can be seen, and notes made about useful points in agricultural economy. A fraternal feeling usually pervades these fairs. The exhibitors are genial, being gratified at having made a successful departure from some of the time-worn systems. It is no small consideration when many visitors to these fairs realize that they have the advantage of wealthy, aristocratic men and women who have undergone expenditures in their researches that would appal the average farmer.

One of the purposes of this paper is to call the attention of farmers to the importance of raising the better grades of table supplies. This for personal comfort and an enlarged opportunity for profit. Even if extra quantities of table supplies cannot be cultivated in wholesale or shipping quantities, their production can be turned to good account.

This fact is emphasized by the great throngs of city folk whose aim of late years is to spend their vacations in the "real country." There are people who have become tired of the clamor and excitement of hotels. They will more and more seek the wholesome quiet of inland farms.

Now, there is much complaint from these money-spending visitors because in many places they miss some food which they have been accustomed to obtain from the best purveyors of the cities; things that directly belong to country production. They do not like the idea of paying high prices for common articles. They comprehend that the same time, labor and soil devoted to inferior things or varieties, will bring forth attractive specialties in green corn, choice berries and fine garden vegetables.

"See the cost of startin' new-fangled fancy things," sometimes pleads the rural host. There must, of course, be some outlay, but it will be insignificant when compared with results. It can be truthfully asserted that the mere fact of excellence in a few specialties gives reputation and attractiveness in many rural boarding-houses that insure these resorts the best-paying customers from season to season. When "goodby" comes from the departing group in the wagon, it is accompanied with, "Be sure to save room for us next summer."—New York Tribune.

FARM AND GARDEN NOTES.

An empty wood shed is the sign of a poor dinner.

If you work yourself those around you will work.

Take care of the chips and you will never be without a fire.

A load of muck is worth a ton of malt, and costs less to get it.

A farmer who does not see the sun rise has need for an alarm clock.

As a manure spreader the sheep beats all the modern contrivances.

No need to buy a new farm so long as you can make the old one better.

Not every egg is sound that seems so, and a lame horse makes a lame farmer.

Pumpkin seed should be removed from the pumpkin when fed to cows or brood sows.

Waste leads to want, and want leads to woe; before you start consider which way you go.

If you have not put in a supply of dirt for dust bath and absorbent under perches, it is about time it was done.

Drinking water should always be within reach, and at all times fresh. It will also pay to always feed good, sound grain.

Farmers will do well to diversify their live stock business. Three kinds of domestic animals should be kept on the farm continually, as a rule.

The corn is as good a deposit as money in the bank if kept dry and free from vermin. It will pay a larger profit within three years than money, too, if safely insured against fire, flood, etc.

After several years' trial of kainit on the corn crop, an experienced friend reports: "Since I commenced to apply kainit to my corn crop when planting it, I have never had a stand spoilt with cut worms."

Nothing is more helpful in allaying inflammation in the udder than frequent bathing with hot water, as hot as can be borne to the hand. If the udder is seriously inflamed steam it and apply flannel dipped in hot [illegible]

[illegible] grain now will be worth double prese[illegible]ge within two years, probably. It will pay to preserve carefully. Substitute the perishable tables, and bulky provender, [illegible] ever possible with the food of [illegible] store stock.

Carrots are highly relished by horses. A few carrots, fed raw, after being sliced, will prove a delicacy to cows, and fed once a day they will promote the appetite and keep the animals in good condition when other foods may not be acceptable.

Carrots are used by some dairymen as regular food for cows, in order to give a deeper color to the butter, and are highly esteemed by them for that purpose. Cooked and thickened with bran they make an excellent mess when fed warm on a cold day.

Grit of some sort is indispensable, as it helps digestion—in fact, it is the fowl's teeth. If fowls have the care you bestow on your cow or horse they will pay a much larger profit than either the cow or the horse. In fact, a little hen getting a reasonable amount of care is the best paying critter on the farm.

Oats fed to live stock in early winter should be attended with vegetables, blue grass or ensilage, as a rule. The condition of the hay at harvesting if immature has [illegible] in combination with oats, for favorable effect. Dry, ripe, brittle hay is not a proper combination with oats alone, in fact, is poor food under the most favorable conditions.

Old Bet.

General Neal Dow says that he recalls very well the first elephant ever exhibited in this country, the famous beast, Old Bet. He went to see her when a boy in Portland, somewhere between 1815 and 1820. The most interesting part of General Dow's reminiscence is how Old Bet died. According to his recollection, she was shot on a highway somewhere near Alfred, in York County, by a farmer, who professed to be indignant because of the amount of money her owners were taking out of the State. Maine was then, perhaps, without exception, the poorest portion of the country, and even the quarters which were collected by the owners of Old Bet represented a considerable portion of the ready money of the people.—Detroit Free Press.

WOMEN SHOULD KNOW.

That when one is accustomed to a low-necked gown she may be safe from cold by bathing her neck in alcohol before she goes out.

That the secret of the unpopularity of some women lies in the fact of their indifference shown to those whom they may happen to be talking with as they think how much more they would enjoy another's society.

That elephant's hide forms the most useful of the new shopping bags, and they are very useful gifts.

That by burning a taper of Japanese lily in a wardrobe closet your gowns may become delicately scented with the odor, but so slightly as to be scarcely perceptible.

That for those who cannot afford chinchilla a new kind of mouflon has been brought into use. The effect is of a white fur, with an overshadowing of black at the tips.

That a new sandwich paste to be used with graham bread is of chestnuts boiled soft and salted. It is a delightful accompaniment to an informal chafing dish supper.

That if hot dishes are served, and the usual table wrappings are not sufficient to all appearances, mats may be dispensed with by placing asbestos mats under the linen.

That rice is said to be better for children as an accompaniment of meat than any form of potato.
